

October 2, 2009

My husband and I have no talent for technology, and just when we master one new innovation there is another hitting us in the face. So when we were told that we had to convert our television to accommodate to the new digital format we found ourselves at a loss as how to proceed. We really wanted someone to come to our home, view the current set-up, review with us our technology needs (TV, computers, and audio) and recommend both equipment and installation, put all of this in place, and be available for service if and when required. We found Jeff Huffman of Jeff's Audio Video. He answered all of our needs, and we have been very content. Jeff is even "on call" 24/7 without charge. I availed myself of this service one evening (I thought 8 p.m. was a decent hour) when I could not figure out how to run the VCR through a TV connection on an older TV. It was a simple matter of finding the correct button, but Jeff's cheerful response rescued my plan to review a video as a possible teaching aid.

Jeff also knows many of the local crafts-persons in town, and he recommended someone who skillfully made modifications to an existing cabinet to accommodate new audio equipment. Jeff is highly skilled at what he does and very business-like. He is also a pleasant person to have working in one's home and helpful in many ways. Householders have long needed to know a plumber, an electrician, the heating specialists, the painter, the mechanic... etc. Now one also needs a technology expert. We are happy that Jeff Huffman of Jeff's Audio Video has joined "our staff."

Sarah T. and Jim W.
Lawrence, Kansas